From the Mill Stream, you can take several short circular walks, using the boardwalks that cross the stream or explore further using the network of public rights of way crossing Foxhall Heath towards Kingsgrove.

The Plashmere Jubilee Walk (available from the Parish Council) links the reserve to the Sandlings nature reserve (by the water tower) and Ruggmere Common via Boley Lane.

FENS, MEADOW AND WILLOW

The Mill Stream reserve has a wide range of valuable habitats that in turn support many different species of plants and animals. In the area immediately around this information board you can see ponds, the stream, fen, scrub and a crop of annual cut willow.

The pond has been created by damming the stream in order to provide habitat for frogs, toads, newts and a range of insects including dragonflies. The fen vegetation, including the very attractive Southern Marsh Orchids, grows and recedes each year in the late summer to prevent vigorous plants taking over.

The scrub around the reserve, dominated by willow species, is very valuable for nesting birds. A recent flying project has discovered that in excess of 70 species of birds use the site or pass through on migration.

From the swimming pool, west of the bushes, a firing range extended east to Boley Drive, 800 yards away. The steeply sloping sandy valley side acted as the "barrier" to stop stray bullets (and musket balls). This range was part of a military training area dating back to Napoleonic times and still in use in the early twentieth century. The area was used to train troops stationed in the barracks in Ipswich, along with a private ground on what is now Plashmere Common.
