A more detailed description:

Situated in the picturesque semi-rural village of Nettlestead Green, this property enjoys a tranquil setting surrounded by beautiful countryside and the scenic River Medway. The nearby village of Wateringbury, approximately one mile away, provides a range of everyday amenities, while a wider selection of shops, restaurants and leisure facilities can be found in East Peckham, Paddock Wood and Maidstone town centre.

Dating back to circa 1609, this exceptional detached cottage is a wonderful example of period architecture, effortlessly blending centuries of history with comfortable modern-day living. Occupying a charming position within the picturesque village of Nettlestead Green, the property is brimming with character and showcases an abundance of original features that reflect its rich heritage.

The accommodation has been thoughtfully arranged to create inviting and practical living spaces. At the heart of the home is a well-equipped country-style kitchen, offering generous preparation space and excellent storage, making it perfectly suited to everyday family life. The separate dining room provides an elegant setting for both informal meals and entertaining, while the cosy sitting room offers a welcoming retreat, complete with the warmth and charm expected of a home of this era. A traditional staircase rises from the sitting room to the first floor, adding to the property's authentic cottage appeal. It should be noted that although currently there is no downstairs WC the rear access and current boot room could convert easily.

The first floor comprises three spacious double bedrooms, each enjoying its own individual character. The third bedroom is accessed via the second, providing a versatile arrangement that could lend itself perfectly to a luxurious dressing room, home office, nursery or occasional guest suite. A well-appointed family bathroom serves the first-floor accommodation.

Outside, the attractive courtyard garden offers a secluded and low-maintenance outdoor space, ideal for enjoying a morning coffee, summer dining or simply relaxing in peaceful surroundings. Designed to be both practical and private, it provides an idyllic extension of the living accommodation.

A further advantage a useful large covered storage area with fitted shelving. Subject to individual requirements, this versatile space could easily be returned to its original use as secure parking or continue to provide valuable storage or workshop space.

Homes of this age and character are increasingly rare to the market, and this delightful cottage offers an exceptional opportunity for buyers seeking a property with genuine heritage, timeless charm and flexible accommodation in a highly desirable village location.
