Property Description

Behind its characterful façade, original sandstone has been painstakingly revealed and restored before being traditionally re-rendered, while refurbished Crittall windows provide a subtle contemporary counterpoint. The house unfolds across beautifully considered interiors where centuries-old craftsmanship sits comfortably alongside bespoke joinery, carefully selected materials and modern conveniences.

Entry is via a welcoming vestibule that opens into the principal living room, a wonderfully atmospheric space defined by original quarry-style flooring and exposed period detailing. At its centre, a 10kW wood-burning stove is set within an extraordinary reclaimed chapel hearth sourced from Wales, creating a natural focal point and reinforcing the home's deep connection to its past.

Beyond the lounge is a thoughtfully designed extended kitchen and dining space. Hand-built cabinetry, finished in a soft blush hue, is paired with solid oak work surfaces, while a range of integrated appliances has been seamlessly incorporated. A traditional double Belfast sink anchors the room, and a shelved cellar below provides practical storage for provisions and wine.

The kitchen flows naturally into the dining area, where bespoke panelling and a built-in heated bench create a warm and sociable setting. Heritage-style bi-fold doors, designed to echo the proportions and character of the original fenestration, open directly onto the courtyard garden, drawing light deep into the plan and establishing a seamless relationship between inside and out.

The first floor is arranged around three generously proportioned bedrooms, each characterised by an abundance of natural light and carefully considered decoration. Original features have been retained wherever possible, while new carpeting and subtle contemporary finishes provide comfort and cohesion throughout.

A beautifully executed family bathroom serves the upper floor. Illuminated by twin rooflights, the space combines traditional detailing with modern luxury. Underfloor heating runs beneath the floor, while antique brass fittings, a drench shower, bespoke vanity unit and richly coloured tiling create a calm, spa-like atmosphere.

Outside, a private courtyard garden has been designed as an extension of the living spaces. Finished with Indian sandstone paving and enclosed by timber screening, it provides a sheltered setting for dining and entertaining. Thoughtfully integrated lighting and sustainable drainage further enhance the space.

The restoration has extended far beyond aesthetics. The property benefits from a comprehensive programme of improvements, including a new electrical installation, entirely renewed plumbing with a pressurised Megaflo system, and a recently replaced roof incorporating modern insulation standards.

Steeped in over four centuries of history yet perfectly attuned to modern life, this is an increasingly rare example of a period home restored with both sensitivity and imagination. Its position within Burton, surrounded by open countryside yet within easy reach of Chester, further enhances its appeal.
