Nestled on Newborough Street in the historic city of York, this charming terraced house offers a delightful blend of modern living and original character. Built in 2008 as part of an award-winning conversion by the esteemed architect Walter Brierly, this Grade II Listed building was originally constructed in 1890, showcasing the unique charm of its era while providing contemporary comforts.

Spanning an impressive 1,195 square feet, the property features three spacious double bedrooms, making it ideal for families or those seeking extra space. The open-plan living area is bathed in natural light, accentuated by original windows and beams that hark back to the building's schoolhouse origins. A beautiful mezzanine balcony adds a touch of elegance, complemented by a striking feature chandelier that enhances the living space.

With two well-appointed bathrooms, this home ensures convenience for all residents. The property is part of a small, welcoming community, offering a sense of belonging in a coveted residential area. Additionally, there is parking available for one vehicle and secure facilities for bike storage, catering to modern lifestyles.

Situated within walking distance of the city centre and the hospital, this home provides easy access to all the amenities York has to offer. The annual ground rent fee is payable to the management company, ensuring the upkeep of this charming development.

This unique property is one of only a few available in this sought-after location, making it a rare find in the market. If you are looking for a home that combines historical charm with modern living, this terraced house on Newborough Street is not to be missed.
