GENERAL COMMENTS

Penvearn represents an exceptional opportunity to acquire a significant period property of character and scale. Approached through granite gateposts to a sweeping driveway with extensive parking, the house makes a commanding first impression.

The larger principal home is entered through the original front door into a magnificent reception hall with an elegant staircase rising to the upper floors. The ground floor provides a formal dining room with a fireplace, a spacious kitchen/dining room with a bay window overlooking the rear garden, and a sitting room with French doors opening to the garden. Upstairs are six generous bedrooms, including a master with en suite shower room, together with a family bathroom and separate shower room. A connecting hallway and staircase give access to the top floor.

The second dwelling—accessed via its own private entrance—offers equally comfortable accommodation. The ground floor includes a substantial kitchen/breakfast room, a formal dining/reception room with curved bay window, and a conservatory enjoying views of the garden. On the first floor is a large bedroom with dressing room and en suite bathroom, plus a light-filled sitting room, again with a curved bay.

The shared top floor provides three spacious rooms currently used as guest bedrooms and additional storage. This level offers excellent scope for a variety of uses, from further bedrooms to a home office suite, or even a separate apartment, subject to any necessary consents. There is plenty of parking, double garage and a detached garage with workshops as well as the large and established gardens.

In summary, Penvearn is a rare find: a substantial period residence offering immense flexibility, extensive gardens, and ample parking, all within easy reach of Redruth's amenities and transport links.

A SHORT HISTORY OF PENVEARN

Penvearn stands as one of Redruth's most characterful period homes, built in 1912 by local builder John Odgers of Clinton Road for the Trounson family, well-known grocers and owners of the former Woolworths building at the top of Redruth High Street. The original build cost was £1,592—considerable for the time—and the house remains a fine example of early-20th-century Cornish architecture.

The Trounsons' eldest son, Donald, often recalled visiting with his sister Elizabeth, who was born at Penvearn in 1919. Childhood chalk drawings by Elizabeth, thought to date from around 1925, can still be seen in the loft. Donald later praised the sensitive extension added decades later, noting "the clever design and comfortable way in which the new work blends with the old."

Penvearn has witnessed many historic moments. In August 1914, the Trounson family gathered in the kitchen to hear news that war had broken out. During the Second World War the property's windows were shattered by a nearby German bomb that tragically claimed lives in an adjacent house. Throughout the war Penvearn provided shelter to several evacuees, including senior staff from Marylebone Grammar School—whose classes were held locally at Fore Street Methodist Church—as well as an RAF sergeant's family, a London family displaced by the Blitz, and Mrs. Hambly, mother of Redruth's art master.

Subsequent owners each left their mark. In 1946 Penvearn was sold to Dr. Ince, who ran his medical practice from the front room. Ownership then passed to Mr. L. A. Hobgen in 1960, to Mr. and Mrs. Hughes-Jones—he an architect—in 1965, and finally to the Regan family in 1984. In 1991, J & E Regan Builders created a sympathetic extension so the family's four children could have bedrooms on the same floor as their parents, keeping the top floor for visiting guests.

Today Penvearn offers not only elegant, well-proportioned accommodation but also a remarkable connection to Redruth's social history—a rare opportunity to own a home that embodies more than a century of Cornish life.

LOCATION

Redruth offers a wide range of facilities which includes shops, bars and restaurants as well as junior and secondary schooling and a mainline railway station connecting with London Paddington. More comprehensive shopping can be found in Truro which is around 12 miles distance from the property. The popular village of Portreath is only 5 miles away and is renowned for its beach and coastal walks.
