Description

What an entrance...

You walk through the front door and, for a moment, forget you are in Nottinghamshire.

The ceiling soars. Light pours through the enormous window, drawing your eye straight through to the garden, while warm timber overhead brings a distinctly Scandinavian tone. Above it all, a gallery landing stretches across the double-height hall. It is an entrance that makes you stop. And look again.

Then the house keeps surprising you.

The sitting room is another story altogether. With its traditional, wonderful chimney fireplace, warm timber windows, and French doors opening straight onto the garden, it feels as though it could belong to a Spanish casa: somewhere the doors would be thrown open in the evening, the last of the sun coming in, and everyone gathering around the fire as the night draws in. There is something wonderfully unexpected about it; relaxed, generous and full of character.

Beyond, there is a large home office and an expansive kitchen, dining and living space — a room made for long lunches, busy mornings and evenings that somehow always seem to go on a little longer than planned. A huge utility and laundry room, complete with granite worktops, is a reminder that even the practical parts of this house have been given thought and attention.

Upstairs, there are four bedrooms, two with ensembles, and a family bathroom. A further generous room, currently used as a separate dining room, could easily become a fifth bedroom with ensuite.

And then there is the garden.

Step outside and the feeling changes again. Palms, lush greenery and a sculptural eucalyptus tree create a private, almost Mediterranean world around the house. It is the kind of garden that makes you want to linger, doors open, glass in hand, with nowhere else you need to be.

This is a much-loved family home, created with imagination and a very personal eye. It feels individual, warm and full of life; a home rather than simply a house.

Frontage

The house has a wide brick-paved driveway, with a circular brick detail at the centre and plenty of space for parking. Mature planting surrounds the frontage, with access to the double garage from the driveway and a pathway leading around to the rear garden.
