Llanwysg House

Set within generous grounds beside the River Usk, Llanwysg House enjoys an exceptional setting with outstanding, far-reaching views towards the Black Mountains and Sugar Loaf. This Grade II* listed Georgian villa was designed by John Nash in the late 18th century for Admiral John Gell and remains a home of considerable architectural presence.

Arranged across four levels, the house has the scale and formality of a significant country residence, with impressive principal reception rooms and a wealth of original classical detail. Tall shuttered sash windows not only flood the interiors with natural light but also frame the remarkable surrounding landscape, while high ceilings, elaborate plasterwork, deep cornicing and a sweeping bifurcated staircase reflect the quality of its Georgian origins.

Some of these original features require repair and restoration, presenting a rare opportunity for a new custodian to sympathetically reinstate the house and preserve its architectural integrity for the future. Extensive bedroom accommodation, further reception spaces and the lower ground floor provide considerable flexibility.

Offered to the market with no onward chain, Llanwysg House represents a rare opportunity to restore an important historic home in one of the area's most impressive settings. Its scale, accommodation and exceptional location lend themselves equally well to use as a substantial family or country residence, while also offering potential for hospitality, holiday accommodation or other business uses, subject to the necessary consents.

Crickhowell is a highly regarded market town within Bannau Brycheiniog National Park, renowned for its independent shops, cafés, pubs and exceptional access to the surrounding countryside. Abergavenny, with its railway station and wider amenities, is also within easy reach.

Entrance Porch & Inner Porch Area
The property is entered through double glazed doors into a bright entrance porch with windows which extend across three elevations - bringing light into this later entrance addition. Tiled flooring.. Stone steps rise between the levels with decorative ballustrades and space for table and chairs. Archways draw in additional light to the inner porch area, with two windows to the side elevations. An imposing timber front door, with glazed panels to the side. Lighting.

Reception Hall
The grand reception hall establishes the architectural scale of the property. A broad bifurcated staircase rises on either side of the hall before meeting at the first floor landing, creating a suitably formal introduction to the principal accommodation.. Ornate coving to the ceiling. Understairs storage cupboards. Two radiators. Decorative panelling to walls.

Cloakroom
A two piece suite in white comprising: close coupled WC and pedestal wash hand basin with tiled splashback. Heated towel radiator.

Lounge
A larger than average reception room. Featuring five tall single-glazed sash windows with fitted shutters to three elevations which draw light across the room and frame views over the surrounding grounds. A central section of feature flooring sits within the carpeted floor, while an elaborate ceiling rose and richly detailed coving emphasise the room's grand proportions. Five radiators complete the space. Inset glass display shelving.

Dining Room
Three tall single-glazed sash windows with fitted shutters follow the curved line of the rear elevation, offering views towards the River Usk. Two radiators. This light reception room offers generous proportions that lend themselves naturally to formal dining, entertaining or use as a second principal sitting room.

Kitchen/ Breakfast Room
Sash windows to the front and rear elevations, together with an additional front-facing window - bring light into a kitchen extending across the width of the house.

A range of matching wall and base units with cupboard and drawers offering ample storage facilities with wooden work surfaces over and tiled splashbacks. Inset ceramic sink unit.
