Title contains restrictions or restrictive covenants

Here is a summary but a property lawyer can advise further: - Joint-owner registration restriction (recorded 19 September 2012): If only one of the joint owners tries to sell or deal with the property in a way that produces capital money, that cannot be registered unless a court orders it. Plain English: because the property is jointly owned, one owner acting alone cannot complete a sale or similar transaction that produces money for them unless a court allows it. - Charge restriction (recorded 22 June 2023): No transfer of the property can be registered without the written consent of the current holder of the charge dated 12 June 2023 (Just Retirement Money Limited). Plain English: the lender must agree in writing before a sale or transfer is registered. - Restrictive covenants from Deed of exchange dated 21 May 1964 (recorded in the Charges Register): the deed contains promises that limit how the land can be used (the register records that restrictive covenants exist but does not set out full wording). Plain English: there are legally binding promises about what you can and cannot do with the land; you must read the 1964 deed to know the exact limits. - Provision in the Conveyance dated 16 October 1959: the purchaser agreed they would not be entitled to any right of light or air or other right over the seller's other land that would restrict the seller's free use of that land for building or other purposes. Plain English: you cannot claim a legal right that stops the neighbouring landowner (the seller's retained land) from building or using their land freely by saying you have a right to light/air from them. - Covenant in the Transfer to the current proprietors (recorded 19 September 2012): the owners promised to observe the covenants referred to in the Charges Register and to compensate (indemnify) for breaches. Plain English: the owners must keep certain promises about the property and must pay for losses if those promises are broken.

Title contains beneficial rights or easements

Here is a summary but a property lawyer can advise further:- The land 'has the benefit of the rights granted' by the Deed of exchange dated 21 May 1964 and is 'subject to the rights reserved' by that same deed. Plain English: that 1964 deed gives this property some positive rights over other land (for example, it may allow access or services) and at the same time other rights may be reserved for different landowners. The register does not give the details, so you must inspect the 1964 deed to see exactly what rights are granted and what rights are reserved.
