LOCATION

Foxton is a well-regarded South Cambridgeshire village, ideally positioned approximately 7 miles south-west of Cambridge, offering an attractive balance of rural surroundings and excellent connectivity. The village itself benefits from a range of local amenities including a primary school, village shop, public house, and a mainline railway station providing direct services into Cambridge and London King's Cross, making it particularly appealing for commuters. Caxton Lane occupies a pleasant position within the village, with easy access to surrounding countryside and a network of scenic walks. The nearby villages of Barrington, Meldreth, and Shepreth offer further day-to-day facilities, while more comprehensive shopping, schooling, and leisure amenities can be found in Cambridge. For commuters, the property is conveniently located for access to the A10 and M11, providing routes towards Cambridge, Royston, and London. The Addenbrooke's Hospital and wider Biomedical Campus are also within easy reach, further enhancing the appeal of this well-connected yet peaceful village setting.
