Sitting discreetly in a walled garden, this elegant semi-detached house, which dates back to the Georgian period, has a lovely, light and bright energy, with fantastic rural views to the rear and yet an easy walk into central Henley-on-Thames.

The accommodation is nicely presented and is arranged over three floors. There are still many original period details and the overall feeling is one of space and light. Steps lead up to the covered entrance and into the hall. From here, there is a sitting room and a separate garden room, the kitchen and dining room being on the lower ground floor. Upstairs, the bedrooms are all double and enjoy lovely views over the surrounding countryside.

Outside

The house sits within a walled garden, there is a pedestrian path leading up the house and a separate vehicle entrance into the parking area. There is a detached garage / store. The garden is lovely, mainly laid to lawn with a pretty apple tree as a focal point. A stone path connects the house, drive and entrance and all is set behind a high wall ensuring privacy and seclusion.
